Though in my need the world abandon me And of His grace though God do not decree That once again my foes should set me free, As of my will, Shall I at heart make mourning therefore still And of regrets keep store and measure fill? Certes, not so: to heaven look up I will, Sans other care. Up, then, my soul! The feeble flesh forswear And unto God, thy keeper debonair, Withdraw thyself, as to thy fortress fair And thy strong place! Let not the flesh have mastery of thy case Nor without cease regrets to thee retrace, Of its estate of sufferance and misgrace Still making moan. The fashion of the esh o erwell is known; No end fore er it maketh with its woen; For full small matter doth it greet and groan On wailful wise.
