More perfect tillage, and the use of such measures as have a tendency to render such lands more mellow and friable, may perhaps be beneficial. No doubt the disease has been observed on fresh virgin soil, that had never before borne a crop of turnips; but it has been remarked in a long experience, that land which had often carried turnips was most affected by this disease. The county of Roxburgh was much afflicted with it, and it continued to increase for 30 years; but latterly it has decreased, and may now be said to have disappeared, in consequence of the superior manuring of all the crops and the larger liming of the soil, and the same result has been experienced everywhere. I may here remark, however, that spurious seed will have the same effect on the turnip, in unfavourable seasons, as want of manure, and the injurious effects of weather, such as was the case in Scotland in the season of 1847. The disease affects the turnip plant from the period of singling to the first hoeing of the crop. The plant becomes flaccid, and the leaves assume a yellowish hue, but do not die, nor does the plant bear the slightest mark of insects; and when once affected never gets free of the disease, and continues to live and grow in size. The disease never affects a whole field at once, nor does it run along drills, but invariably begins in spots...
