Entry No. 2, is north-east of No. 1, nearer the summit. Very little coal was taken from this. No. 3 is two hundred yards from No. 2. Walden s Ridge, proper, rises eight hundred and fifty feet above the valley in which the furnace is situated. The main mine to the west of Walden s Ridge is separated from it by a deep gulf, with very steep slopes. In this portion of the Cumberland Table-land the surface is very rugged, wild, and broken, with innumerable ridges and peaks standing boldly above the general level. Looking to the north-west from the top of Walden s Ridge, the landscape, covered with a dense forest, appears like a boisterous sea. Scarcely a single field can he seen for many miles....
